NEW YORK, N.Y. – Girl Scouts of the USA elected a new National Board of Directors during the 2008 Girl Scout National Council Session/51st Convention in Indianapolis, Oct. 30 – Nov. 2.

The new National Board members will serve the organization over the next three years, a period during which the Girl Scout movement will continue its historical mission to build girls of courage, confidence, and character.

"I feel confident that through their efforts our new National Board will promote the heart of the Girl Scout mission – to make the world a better place," said Kathy Cloninger, CEO of Girl Scouts of the USA. "The guidance they provide will help to ensure that Girl Scouting remains a relevant and dynamic opportunity for girls and young women."

The Girl Scout National Board of Directors consists of 30 men and women, with expertise in fields ranging from financial services to publishing and hail from the Latino, African-American, Asian-American, and Caucasian communities, a reflection of Girl Scouting's strong commitment to diversity.
