

Below is a screen shot of the response to a survey on a Catholic website that showed that 57 percent of respondents were concerned enough about Girl Scout issues that they would not allow their daughters to participate in Girl Scouts. The relevant information has been circled in red to help you find it easily. The page can be accessed online here.

The screenshot shows a web browser window displaying an article from OSV Newsweekly. The article title is "Girl Scouts: At odds with Catholic teachings?". The byline is "By Brian Fraga - OSV Newsweekly, 7/3/2011". The article text discusses the controversy surrounding Girl Scouts' affiliations with pro-choice organizations and Planned Parenthood. A survey is embedded in the article, asking: "If you had/have a daughter of Girl Scout age, how concerned would you be about the potential for negative influences, particularly in the realm of sexual ethics?". The survey results are as follows:

Response	Percentage
No more than her participation in any other activity or group.	21%
I'd be a little extra careful about the leadership of the local Girl Scout group	19%
My daughter would not be allowed to join. And boycott the cookies!	57%
I'm not sure.	3%

The survey results are circled in red in the original image. The article also includes a quote from Michelle Tompkins, a spokeswoman for the Girl Scouts of the USA, and a quote from Fr. Robert Barron. The page includes a sidebar with navigation links, social media sharing options, and advertisements on the right side.
